

The version control system that I have used for my program is GitHub. I decided to use this version control system because of how easy it is to implement and use in your directory from your command line, and because of the previous knowledge and familiarity that I already have with this method of version control. The advantages of GitHub version control include easy access and integration to your system, branching, and security (having to enter username and password to commit). A disadvantage with GitHub is that it isn't an ideal version control method when dealing with very large repositories.

